Hey there! Just saw this place and thought I'd participate.

A quick note on my pedigree: I had an Atari 2600 for years now and still play it...it sits proudly next to my Saturn and Genesis w/all trimmings. It was a spunky little unit.

Favorite games: Kaboom, Missile Command (a time-killing guilty pleasure for me), Solaris, Desert Falcon, and Oystron. Plenty of other great ones, but those come to mind off the top of my head, no particular order.

Least favorite: This will be a little longer. Heading the list is easily Custer's Revenge, one of the dumbest games I've ever played. Also on that list is Strawberry Shortcake, Karate by Froggo, and Towering Inferno. I think TI would be fun, but I can't make it work. I have yet to hear anyone being able to actually play it. Bill Gates must have worked for U.S. Games before striking out with Microsoft.

Games I would love to see: I would love to see an RPG--Adventure, Dark Chambers, and Dark Mage are good, but something like, say, Lunar or Myst would be good. A decent one-on-one fighter would be great, but that's kind of tricky with two buttons, let alone the one on the 2600. And a guilty pleasure, a BASEketball translation. Don't know how it would be done, but it would be neat.

Hi,
Just stumbled upon this list. Glad to have found it. Way back in the early 80's I had an Atari 2600 and was an ADDICT! I owned darn near every game. Then came Nintendo.. Out went Atari, I cant even remeber where the stuff went. GArbage?
Now I am 35 and back into the Atari and kickin myself in the butt for losing my original games.
Spend alot of time on Ebay finding my fav games.
Still lookin for Carnival, CrackPots and a few others I liked back when. I cant find any lkocal atari clubs in my area of Florida. Any of you located here in S. FLA?
Well glad to be here.

Hello and welcome to the group. (I don't post as often as I'd like, but hang in there, I'll get to you sooner or later.) Just wanted to drop a quick line before I go to see the new South Park movie.

Live in Florida? No. My grandparents do (as I suspect many others). Here in Illinois, it's a bit rough. There aren't many Atari fans here, aside from me and my pal Marty, and he's into it more from the 80's nostalgia angle than anything else. But I still have my unit and play it with pride. I have several different systems and keep the ones I play the most by the TV. It's the 2600, my Genesis with all the trimmings (CD, 32X, Power Base Converter), and Saturn. Look at it this way: several Atari games didn't have the luxury of nice graphics, so they had to make the games fun. It didn't always work (MASH), but when it did work, it worked great (Secret Quest).

My $0.02.

I'm impressed with the Megamania score. I don't have the patience to get very far.
 I've noticed a lot of later Activision shooters, like Megamania, Spider Fighter, and River Raid, the missile is guided...it tracks with your movements. This is hard for me to get used to. My preferred technique in shooters is to fire and scoot the aych-ee-double-hockey-sticks out of the way. But with those games, you move, so does the missile, and timing isn't my strong suit to begin with. Anyone else notice this?

Yes! My first computer was an Atari 400 back in 1983. Then I got an Atari 800XL in '85 which I still have and just recently bought a 520ST from an auction.
Some of my favorite 8-bit games for Atari were Realm of Impossibility, Star League Baseball, Seven Cities of Gold, Agent USA, Great American C.C. Road Race, Jumpman & Jumpman Junior, Montezuma's Revenge, and pretty much any of the Infocom games. I've also heard that Mule was an excellent game, but I never had that one.

My brother built a cable that you can connect an 800XL to your PC. That way you can download games off the internet, because we found some of our floppies were starting to go bad. It is better than any emulator.

Oh, let's see. I only have a 2600 (for about a week, then I'll be getting a 7800), so here's my list of favorites from my collection.

"Pitfall II-The Lost Caverns"-As frustrating as navigating past the bats and condors is, I love the exploration and the snazzy BGM.

"Desert Falcon"-As close to Zaxxon excitement on the 2600 and I love the sound effects.

"Oystron"-A homemade game from about two years ago by an enterprising gent named Piero Cavina. This game is a scream to play, a real test of skill. Dizzyingly busy but never chaotic.

"Dark Mage"-a RPG, also a homemade game, but the creator's name escapes me at the moment. It's a text adventure ala "Zork" and the controls take some getting used to, but still fascinating and, until a couple of others finish their developments, the only game in town.

"Keystone Kapers"-Fast movement and strategy as the computer throws more and more obstacles at you.

"Demon Attack"-A classic, 'nuff said.

"Spider Fighter"-When the game picks up speed, it's amazingly involving.

"Astroblast"-Saved me from bugging my parents for an Intellivision when I was young.

"Video Pinball"-"Midnight Magic" is more advanced, sure, but VP just has a unique feel.

"Missile Command"-Love it, love it, love it, even though I know of no one else that even likes it.

"Kaboom!"-Sweet.

"Bump And Jump"-Another fav.

"Solaris"-The best Atari game for us Flyboys.

"Reactor"-A game to play for hours and hours and hours....

On the other side, here are games that never should have been released.

"Journey Escape"-a.k.a. "Rock And Roll Escape". Utter trash.

"Swordquest-Earthworld"-Not that the game is horrible, I just don't get the point.

"Swordquest-Fireworld"-The contests here are more annoying than fun.

"Custer's Revenge"-Quite possibly the worst of the "Mystique" adult titles, and that's no small accomplishment. Plus, the whole rationale behind making the adult games according to the instruction manual is ludicrous.

"Dragster"-Way too short for my taste.

"Spiderdroid"-A bad ripoff of "Amidar" that didn't even have the warm and fuzzy memories "Amidar" could generate.

"Karate"-Another Froggo game...let me just say all the Froggo games reek.

"Home Run"-Oh, brother.

"Strawberry Shortcake Musical Matchups"

That's it for the moment.

If you mean the movie, oh, yeah. I have it on video tape. If you mean a game based on the movie, I'm afraid not. I've heard rumors that a prototype of it exists somewhere (along with The Last Starfighter), both for the 5200, but no luck with anyone having it. At least, that they'll admit.
 I did try about a years

38. The Atari 7800 reviews (part 1)

Yahoo group: yatari
Date: 1999-08-31 23:42:15 UTC
From: TheBlueSkyRanger
Topic: 1 Message: 38

Well, gang, my new toy arrived, and so have a few games. More are on the way, about 17 of them, in fact. I have six of them at the moment. Herewith, a look at everything so far.

THE UNIT ITSELF: This was the best Atari could do? As much as I disliked the NES (Atari's chief competition at the time), the graphics and sound were clear and sharp. Atari's visuals so far aren't that impressive. The sound clearly is generated by a Stella chip. For those unfamilliar, the Stella chip is the main processor for the 2600. The result is relatively weak sound. Being backwards compatible is a plus, but clearly the games are what will determine the worth of this system. It's potential is shot.

THE JOYSTICK: Oh, come on. Not bad, a bit sturdier than the standard issue 2600 ones, but a bit uncomfortable for extending playing (of course, I could be spoiled, preferring a pad). Height of the stick would be good for pushing at the base, but it's hard to get leverage. The two action buttons set for lefty or righty play is a nice touch.

DESERT FALCON-My personal favorite so far, even though the 2600 is actually a little better. While the graphics are head and shoulders above the 2600, the control is a bit imprecise, compounded by the huge joystick. Same wonderful sound effects and cheesy music.

HAT TRICK-Not bad, but it's no Blades Of Steel. The animation drags this one down. The players glide across the ice, but don't "turn", just instantly assume the directions. Distracts from handling the puck. Could've been better.

GALAGA-Fine if you have no other Galaga access. The graphics have no detail and the sound effects are bland. The collision detection is laughable--sometimes, your double shot is clearly aimed so that one missile takes out an attacker and the other keeps going, but both will vanish. The Game Over stats are incomplete. The arcade version was so crisp, this is a letdown. Invest in a TG-16 and get Galaga '90.

ROBOTRON 2084-The big drawbacks here are less-than-snazzy sound effects and the control. Movement is clear, but you can only fire in the direction you are moving. If you are standing still, you are sunk. Basically, as you fire, you are moving towards the crowd of targets, so if you miss, look straight ahead and say "Bye-bye." With two buttons, one could have let you fire while standing still or in the last direction moved. Also lacking that "Unrestrained chaos" atmosphere the arcade and Genesis versions have. Diversionary.

JOUST-Actually a very good translation. The control takes some prodding and the flapping is a little stronger than I recall, but all in all, very good. Recommended.

FOOD FIGHT-A guilty pleasure, even if it is lacking the polish of the arcade. I love whole game, and the "Instant Replay" makes you laugh when you see it. Not for everyone, get if you like goofy fun and silliness.

More reports as the titles flow in.

Here's the next batch.

CENTIPEDE-This one actually catches the arcade flavor. I love playing this game and hearing the steady beat of the approaching centipede. Busy, busy, busy, and lots of fun.

CHOPLIFTER-Sega did this one much better. The problem is two fold. First, there's the graphics. While nice, they are big. Really big. The result is you see relatively little of the screen, so when the superfast and superaccurate fighter jets appear, by the time you've said, "Uh-oh," you're dead. Also, the bomb dropping is a bit difficult to get used to. More frustrating than enjoyable.

DONKEY KONG-A pretty good translation, although including the fourth screen from the arcade would have been nice. Once you get past the three screen, the computer doesn't seem to step up the difficulty. It seemed the same tactics used over and over. Pretty good, but it'll get old.

DONKEY KONG JUNIOR-All four arcade screens are here, but the same problem with DK exists--the difficulty doesn't seem to go up, it just loops back to the beginning. Also, the collision detection needs some work in spots. On the second screen, I was standing on the island when a bird dropped it's egg. The egg came close to touching me but didn't, but the computer counted it as a kill. My reaction is not printable in a public forum.

JINKS-Has dethroned Desert Falcon as my favorite 7800 game. While the sci-fi storyline is silly at best, the game is tricky and takes time to get right, let alone master. The sound effects are fine, and the music during the interludes is really cool. Side note: I recognize the opening voices and music from Gauntlet.

TOWER TOPPLER-Credited on the box as being designed by U.S. Games, TT is an exercise in frustration. You have to memorize the exact path to take, since some of the bricks you walk on have a nasty habit of vanising beneath your feet. As a result, not much adventuring and a pretty staid experience. Having to make sure the switches on your unit are set properly or the game won't run implies shoddy programming.

XEVIOUS-A very good translation of a mediocre game. The flat sounds are a help--the background sounds in the arcade gave me a headache. Not that much excitement or variety, just moving around and occasionally hitting targets.

We can only choose ONE? Oh, man...in that case, I don't know. There are so many that are true classics. Even during the final 2600 wave (the "red label" games) there were still a slew of remarkable titles. As lousy as Gravitar was, Defender II was almost arcade perfect, and Solaris kicks. Even the 7800 I'm playing with, while not exactly a firestarter, has some noteworthy titles. Any chance of edpanding the list?

Jaguar:
Cybermorph
NBA Jam
Club Drive
Troy Aikman Football
Cannon Fodder
Alien Vs. Predator
Not that tough a list, that's all the games I have. ;-)

Atari 7800
Dark Chambers
Food Fight
Jinks
Desert Falcon
Meltdown
The other games are pretty much take-or-leave.

Atari 2600--this is the tough list and changes depending on my mood. Currently, it stands at (and in no particular order):
1) Oystron by Piero Cavina
2) Solaris (the best flyboy game on the system)
3) Desert Falcon
4) Kaboom!
5) Missile Command (a true guilty pleasure)
6) Yar's Revenge
7) Pitfall II: The Lost Caverns
8) Freeway
9) Dark Chambers
10) Astroblast

Atari 2600?

1. Space Invaders. During the 80's I played this game into the ground.

2. Yars Revenge. Lots of replay.

3. Ms. Pac-Man

There are so many good ones hard to decide an accurate list.

Okay, enough of this weenie "These are the best." Let's bare our teeth and talk about the worst games ever. Ones that give you nightmares when you think about them. El barfo! This is a starter list for me. Add or subtract as you see fit.

Strawberry Shortcake Musical Matchups-holy white tornado, what were they thinking with this? Besides, I've had my butt kicked by women in Mortal Kombat. A girls' game does not have to be wimpy.

Custer's Revenge-while all the Playaround/Mystique games were horrible, this is probably the worst of them all. Not only is it's logic for making games adults can win bogus, the "game" isn't really a game. Walk the length of the screen to the female Indian while slow arrows fall from the sky around you. A perfect example of people who think any mope with a keyboard can make a game.

Combat-"This game is so lousy, you couldn't give it away." "Oh, yeah?" Even if there was a one-player option, I don't think this game could be enjoyable. The only fun comes with the cheating in Tanks.

Gravitar-Incredibly difficult to the point where it isn't fun. The biggest problem is the joystick. Seperate buttons for the thrust and the tractor beam would have been a big help.

Double Dragon-The control scheme ruins a graphically nice game. Holding down the button and using the joystick to select your attack means that you are holding still while attacking. My technique of being able to move once the punch is finished being thrown doesn't work here, leaving you in line for a whuppin'.

Swordquest-Earthworld-Actually, all the Swordquest games suffer from the same flaw, which is the limitations of the system. You need the comic books to understand what is going on (and even that doesn't always work) and even after you "win", you don't see the point. A weak quest game.

Venture-A personal annoyance.

Sky Jinks-Taught me a lesson not to trust ads. I was expecting a high speed race ala Grand Prix. Instead, I got a weak revision of Skiing. Just dull.

Home Run-Yick. Probably the worst baseball game I ever played, and I owned a Digital Diamond. Hard to get a feel for, the speed is all wrong.

Dukes Of Hazard-A very weak game. Play it once, you'll treat Bump 'N Jump like the treasure it is.

That should do for starters. Let's hear some comments!

Its a game of cops and robbers????

What the *uck?

IT'S 2 DOTS IN A FRICKIN MAZE!!!

FOR A CHALLENGE THEY HIDE THE MAZE, YOU MOVE AROUND ON A BLANK SCREEN!!!!

AAAAAAAAAAAAUUUUUURRRGHHHHHHH!!!!!!!!!

There, thats much better.

Ah, now THESE are the kinds of exchanges I enjoy!

I heartily second the Maze Craze suggestion. I have it in my collection, gathering dust (I'm not sure if it works and I don't care to waste valuable seconds finding out). Although it is a bit better than a game called (as released by Sears) Maze or Chase (I think it may have been called Slot Racers). The idea of it was you were driving a car around a big maze and occasionally fired a shot to hit your opponent. Some variations let you move faster than the shot. Wheeee.

Although I can understand how people can dig it, for my gaming tastes, I'd side with willynwv about Dragster. The game is too fast for those of us not so much into twitch games. Once I finally got the hang of it, the games lasted less than eight seconds. I like a longer ride than that.

Space War. Oh, yes, the game that makes Combat look like fun. I almost forgot about it.

Chew on this: Indy 500. The least exciting racing game on planet Earth. Aside from the cheat, there's really no technique. Super Sprint in the arcades (I haven't played the Atari version yet) was fun. Peddle to the metal, spin the steering wheel, and you glide through the turns. That's how Indy 500 should have been...if it was possible.

Basic Math-'nuff said.

Krull-I feel guilty about this, 'cause I did like the movie (quit snickering). The movement of the web becomes more frustrating later, the first level "wedding" is a waste of time, and since the beast, Glaive, and you move at the same rate of speed, once he wises up, it becomes almost impossible to beat him or escape when you run out of ammo.

Tempest-I was lucky enough to try this "prototype" game for the 2600. Well, luck is a relative phrase. The fast action and ample ammo that made the arcade game eat about $10 of my money per visit is non-existant here. Clearly intended to sponge off the popularity of the name with no redeeming value. Kind of like Kato Kaenlin.

Galaga-before you start panting (like I did) about the Namco classic on the 2600, chill. This game is actually a bad rip-off of River Raid from (I think) Taiwan. You fly down a river, gathering fuel, dodging enemies, and destroying bridges. The only difference, aside from no Activision logo on screen, is the bridges are in the middle of the river with nothing really connecting them to land. If you think you can fly around them, I haven't been successful yet.

Mogul Maniac-I think I remember a special "joyboard" that was made for this. You stood on it, tilted this way or that, and enjoyed a skiing simulation. Good idea, bad execution. There's no sense of speed, skill, or fun, kind of like Activision's entry. The difference is MM is a first-person perspective. There's a reason Alpine Racer is so popular.

Gopher-A blatantly unfair game from Vidtec/U.S. Games. Without a chance to fill the gopher tunnels without him digging up, plus the speed with which the gopher pops up then grabs your carrots, this is more frustrating than fun.

Time Pilot-One of my favorite arcade games reduced to "crash-and-burn" status. Yuck.

Okay, who's next with some gripes?

You don't mention your country of origin, so I'm going to assume you are American with NTSC. So, you want info, here's what I've got.

I'm going to assume you know about the auctions on eBay, Yahoo, etc. If you don't like hunting and just want the games, like I do, here's some sources.

Best Electronics is a place that carries a lot of Atari stuff. Not only do they have the new release Alfred's Challenge for the 2600 (haven't played it, don't ask me if it's any good), they also have games and supplies for the Lynx and all other Atari products. The selection is quite impressive, and they even have an unreleased Lynx prototype called Hyperdrome which sounds like that race game where you can shoot a cannon that slows down other racers (not Road Blasters). They are available, some without instructions, some with, and prices range from $10 to $40. They are at www.best-electronics-ca.com

Telegames carries a lot of games for just about every system ever made. They are developing and publishing new games for the Lynx, with three new titles, Bubble Trouble, Raiden, and Fat Bobby. The only catch with Telegames is you're going to pay. Their prices are MSRP, but here's a new source. The USA division is at www.telegames.com

B & C Computervisions not only carries stuff for every Atari system ever made, it even has some developer's stuff to make your own if you're really slick. Nothing so fancy with the Lynx, just some collector's pins and replacement parts. As usual, some games are boxed, some just instructions, some loose, and the site is at www.myatari.com

Video 61 has been doing Atari stuff for over 16 years. They publish software for the Atari home computer line-up and they have a good selection of Lynx stuff. They are at www.angelfire.com/mn/video61

4Jays has stuff for all classic systems, but their Lynx line-up is almost sold out. You'll have to move quick. They are at www.4jays.com

That's all I've got. Hope this helps.

One (1) copy of Space Invaders, blue picture label, with the dust cover on the end fallen off, for two bucks.

Two (2) Intellivision cartidges, loose, sports titles, so without the overlays and instructions, you're sunk.

Fifteen (15) copies of Duck Hunt.

EBay is good, you can usually get a 7800 for about 20 bucks, or go for a system with games for a little more, make sure it comes with the AC adapter, they DO NOT take 2600 ones, they are very different connectors. other than that, the 2600 joysticks will work, but only 1 button, so some games won't work right, like Choplifter, for example. My advice is to get the joypad NES style controllers, they make it sooo much more fun, the original joysticks are junk. You can find the joypads if you search for "atari 7800 rare unusual", they are 19.99 a pair, but worth every penny.

Howdy, gang! I haven't checked in in a while, and thought I'd say hi.

What's new in my life with Atari? Well....

I recently found out about a company calling itself Songbird Productions. Apparently, they're a group of hobbyists creating their own games for the Jaguar and Lynx, and are open to 2600 and 7800 games. And, if any of you are interested in cracking the programming code and making your own games, apparently they will help you make the games for sale, althought whether or not they sell them or you do, I can't tell. One of their games was just sold on eBay. Type Songbird Productions into the Yahoo search engine and you'll be there.

For Christmas, I got Atari Arcade Hits 1 for my computer. God, I love Tempest, but I can't seem to make it past level 20. I used to do better than that. Anyway, it features Pong, Missile Command, Centipede, Super Breakout, and Tempest. It also has a load of other goodies, like long interviews with Nolan Bushnell (for those who came in late, Bushnell founded Atari and is considered by many the father of video games). It also has box art, advertising flyers, and some QuickTime movies of Atari games, including a view of the 2600 version of Tempest (check it out, you'll see why no one is sweating this one never making the market). I'm anxiously hoping for a Volume 2, preferably with Arabian and Kangaroo.

Haven't done much gaming lately. I've been hoping to find (with no luck) a puzzle game for the Atari called "Save Mary." Supposedly, the prototype exists, and it was mentioned in the 2600 Connection. It was almost the last game for the 2600, but it was not released in favor of putting Klax on the market first. By the time SM's moment arrived, Atari had pulled the plug on the 2600. But I'm still looking....

New (to me) Atari games I'm playing and loving:

Tunnel Runner from CBS-It ain't Doom, but it is maddeningly effective. Seeing a Zot come around a corner will make me slam on the brakes faster than you can say "Troma." Lots of fun, highly recommended.

Ahh...I'm a new member and a former Atari addict. I probably owned 70 different Atari games during my childhood. My parents paid $250 in 1981 for our first Atari. $250, do you believe that?!?!?!? That's probably about $600 if you factor in the inflation rate.

I have a bunch of games that I loved on Atari. I'm a VERY competetive person, so Atari naturally appealed to my nature. Every game was either one on one, or had no ending, meaning all you could try to do was beat your high score, which I did again and again until I got some totally unreachable high score that no one on the planet could hope to match.

Pitfall - i played it out for the full 20 minutes numerous times. The underground passageways were shortcuts, but only if they weren't dead ends. I wonder if anyone got all the way thru that game?

Skydiver - awesome game for a 12 pack of beer and a bunch of buddies. Both skydivers tried to be the first to land on a pad in the middle of the screen. Your planes came out from opposite sides. Press the button to make your man jump from the plane. The longer you waited to pull the chute, the better because you fall fast until you pull the chute, and the faster you fall, the more likely you will be the first to land on the pad. But wait, there is an invisible line where you have gone too far and your chute wont open. I can still play this game for 5 hours at a time.

Raiders of the lost Ark - ahhhh, the first game that have you absolutley no instructions whatsoever on what you are supposed to do (kinda like myst). I can beat the game, but only because I found a magazine that told you what you are supposed to do. One of the few Atari games you could actually beat.

All of the Activision games were AWESOME! Kaboom, River Raid, Keystone Kapers, Dragster, Decathalon...I could go on and on. Did anyone else send in for the patches you could get if you attained a certain high score??? I did! It took me about a year to find a camera that would actually take a screen shot that was good enough to mail in, but I had a denim jacket covered with Activision patches when I was in 4th grade.

Other games I loved - maze craze, night driver, pac-man, space invaders, joust, donkey kong, mario brothers, defender, combat, ADVENTURE (the first RPG), I could go on and on....

The value of a game depends on what a person is willing to pay for it (I know duhh...) Most of the atari games can be got for around $8 US but certain games have more value to certain types of collects (I.E. the realy bad "porno" games such as custards last stand will sell more to collectors of such items) also it depends where you sell them (A 1979 superman atari 2600 game will get more money at a comic convention than at a electronics show)

Ooo, let me play, too!

Atari 2600:
This one is unfair because there are so many classics for it. The list changes as my moods do, but here's a nuts and bolts to get things going.

1) Yar's Revenge. Potentially the greatest 2600 game ever.

2) Quick Step. A Q*Bert clone that is a ton of fun. Fast paced and challenging.

3) Pitfall II: The Lost Caverns. I love a good adventure game where you have an ADVENTURE. Navigating the mine while searching for the items is great fun, even when you know the ins and outs.

4) Solaris. The best 2600 game for us flyboys, edging out the fun StarMaster.

5) Stargate (a.k.a. Defender II). An amazing game from a technical standpoint, delivering true arcade graphics on the difficult hardware and was fun, also.

Honorable mentions:
Frogger
Stellar Track
Star Trek-Strategic Operations Simulator
Oystron
Mondo Pong
Keystone Kapers
Kaboom!
Vanguard
Quadrun
Snoopy Vs. The Red Baron
Bump 'N Jump
Freeway
H.E.R.O.
Astroblast
Moon Patrol
Phoenix

Not that you asked, but

Five worst on the 2600:

1) Custer's Revenge. Not only boring and the result of defective logic, but patently offensive, too. Besides, were these adult games REALLY supposed to titilate anyone?

2) Karate. Froggo's games were almost uniformly bad, but this was the worst. Graphically, they did what they could, but the control and collision detection is horrible.

3) Kung-Fu Master. This is what happens when you chase away the people who make your company great. You do an arcade translation with great graphics (considering) and BGM, but the control is not only horrible, the game skews against the player thanks to the exclusion of the jump kick.

4) Mario Bros. The technique that drives the game, waiting under a ledge and hitting the creeps just a little to the side so that they land next to you, is nonexistent here. Makes the game frustrating. Speed control lacks, also.

5) Dukes Of Hazzard. An agonizingly slow game considering the source. No stunts, and uninspired.

(Dis)honorable mentions:

Tempest
Anything by Mystique/Playaround
Anything by Froggo
Star Wars-Jedi Arena
Strawberry Shortcake Musical Matchups

And many more. I'll get to the 7800 and arcade later.

Well, it's a little weird. You will notice a flashing dot on one of the two platforms. You have to leap up to it, grab the "brick", and take it over to the ladder on the other side. You keep doing this until the ladder is high enough to escape with.

The system was complete with everything needed for it to run (including a controller), and came with one game cartridge (it was Qix.) The system works fine. I was wondering if anyone else here owns a 5200, and if they could recommend any games to me or have any other advice concerning Atari 5200s.

By the way, the system cost me $18.50. Was this a good deal?

Guess what, nerds. I have an x-rated Atari cartridge... "Custer's Revenge", made by the esteemed company, "Swedish Erotica". Basically, it's Custer's revenge via having his way with a helpless Indian maiden, with enormous pixelated breasts. Both characters are stark naked (as far as Atari graphics go), so much is left to the imagination, except for Custer's Colt model 1895 love gun, if you catch my drift. The object of the game is to avoid arrows and cacti in order to "penetrate" the Squaw, which is accomplished each time your press the orange button on your "joy stick", pardon the pun. Envy me.

Hi there. Yes there was a game called Colour Clash released as shareware. It was actually on an ST Format or ST User cover disk. I don't know the number but I think it was sometime in 1993 or 1994.
And yes, you were a Chameleon!

I do actually have the disk somewhere and if you don't have any luck I could dig has these disks for download on the Net anywhere.

You can get those games from The Little Green

The URL is http://lgd.fatal-design.com/

The files there are kept as image files so you will need to extract the images onto a

You can get a copy of it from that site too.

I think it's about time again that we listed our favorite Atari 2600 games.

Here are my favorite 10 of the 25 or so Atari 2600 games that I own:

#10- Star Master
A space game very similar to Star Raiders, but this game is more simple and so does not need the keypad.

#9- Space Attack
This game has lots of action.

#8- Pitfall
A very big game.

#7- Missile Command
It's missing some of the features of the arcade version, but is still fun.

#6- Asteroids
This game is a lot like original, but I miss the vector graphics.

#5- Moon Patrol
Good music and sound effects. The fact that every level was different gives the player a feeling of progress not found in a game such as Space Invaders.

#4- Combat
The original pack-in game for the 2600. Good 2 player game with lots of different game modes.

#3- Solaris
Incredible graphics for the 2600!

#2- Adventure
The random level feature of this game gave it a lot of replay value.

#1- Pong Sports (also known as Video Olympics)
One of the best 2 or 4 player games around! Who doesn't like a game of Pong now and then?

So what favorite games does anyone else here own that they would like to discuss?

I have a 7800 (plays 2600 carts and "Prosystem" 7800 carts).

When I was younger I had an Atari 800XL computer (similar to a 5200) and have been thinking of getting a 5200 if I can find one in good shape for a reasonable price.

I have a 7800 with about 15 7800 games and about 80 2600 carts, and a Jag/Jag CD with about 20 games. The Jag CD's Music Light show is still the best light show I've seen on any system, the playstation one sucks, and my PSX MTV music generator is no better. Atari still rules that category. I have some very rare games for the Jag, like Breakout 2000, Towers 2, Alien vs. Predator, Iron Soldier 1 and 2, Defender 2000, they are fun I guess, but remind me of early 90s video games, nothing special, just kind of there.

Whenever there is a discussion on the 5200, the controllers almost always come up. It was the controllers that really made the system different, because they were analog. You hear a lot of complaints about how hard it is to control with them for games like Pac-Man and Frogger, but they are really nice for games like Pole Position. Unfortunately, the controllers break pretty often which is why they cost so much.

If you do decide on getting a 5200, here are some games that I recommend.

These are the more common ones:

Defender
The 5200 version resembles the arcade version much more closely than the 2600 version (not suprisingly.)

Qix
Simple, yet fun. The graphics for this version are somewhat better than the version for the Atari computers, as I understand.

Centipede
This version is supposed to closely resemble the arcade version. This version is also supposed to be superior to the Atari computer version.

Here are some rarer games you should take a look at if you are willing to spend the extra money:

Choplifter
The 5200 version is supposed to be one of the best versions of the game in existence. When I was little, I loved to play this game on our Apple IIe.

Rescue on Fractalus
A very early Lucasfilm game. This game has great 3D graphics you wouldn't expect to see work on a 5200.

Ballblazer
Another Lucasfilm game. This is also a 3D game, featuring a split screen for 2 players.

The graphics on Pac-Man are good. Missile Command is good with the trakball, and my personal favorite so far is Joust. $18.50 is a good price considering the controller alone is worth more than $20.

Or better yet, does anyone have one they can spare for me. I will pay a reasonable amount, but I won't go above $20, so don't even ask.....

all I need is a power pack. My 7800 does just fine on its own, since I have 285 games for it and all (7800 and 2600 titles).

and one last thing, does anyone have "one" double-sided cartridge they'd be willing to part with??? I'd just like to see how it plays. I'd send it back to you right after I try it out....

I have always been curious as to how a double-sided game would work........

The main places to find games are E-bay and Yahoo Auctions.....

But if you don't feel like spending more than what the game was originally worth back in 1988, I suggest going to flea markets, garage sales, and even a few pawn shop or appliance repair places. You might get lucky.

Most of my games I got at flea markets and garage sales.

Which games do you have???

Maybe we could trade if you have one I want. Maybe I could even trade you a game to get a controller. I need a Kid Vid conrtoller to run Smurf: Save the Day. My list of games is way too long to put on here, but I can send it to you via e-mail.

Here are the specifications of my Atari 5200 power supply:

INPUT : 120VAC 60Hz 38VA
OUTPUT : 9.3VDC AT 1.95A

I'm not so sure you can find a replacement at a Radio Shack though. If not, the best way to get one would probably be to bid on one in Ebay. By the way, it's a good idea not to leave one plugged in for too long, as this may cause them to wear out.

"Spiderdroid" and "Amidar" are the same game!!!!
There are only subtle differences. Sound is different, the characters are different, but everything else is the exact same. It's like one of them reprogrammed the other's game, but forgot to change the basic game elements. Even the way it keeps score and lives are the exact same, nothing changed, not even the background......

Well, you'd know it was for the 5200 because it would have a funky Y cable on the end with two 15 pin connectors (M & F) on the end. I just found out that they made the same joystick for the 2600, with just the standard 9 pin connector. For the 2600, both fire buttons are obviously the same function, on the 5200 one, they are different. I have also seen variations of this stick in blue and clear plastic!

Since I posted this message, I have managed to come up with a few of each to add to my collection. My latest recent addition is a boxed MasterPlay Interface, which allows you to use ANY 9 pin 2600 style joystick on the 5200. I really enjoyed using the EPYX 500XJ on Ms PacMan with this device.

Hello-

I have some games that I still cannot finish on the emulators and would love to see if the endings are special. For example, my friend and I have been struggling with Shamus for years now (silly, I know).
Does anyone have any plans for a Cheat finder (like MAME) or a hex entry interface for any existing or future Atari 8bit emus?
Any input on this is greatly appreciated.

Peace,

Hi all!

Just joined this Group! I don't know why I've not joined before either! ;-))

I'm an Atari Falcon owner and user, more about me and my computer, plus downloads and lots of Atari links can be found on my Atari Pages:

http://jfhaslam.atari.org

Cheers!

Hi
Is there some way to make any emu to run the CSAVE command, and make that noise, so i can easily record it on cassete? I have the XC12 tape drive, but no disk drive :(
Thanks

198. 240VAC to 9VAC Mains Adapter

Yahoo group: yatari

From: bluemax_101
Topic: 198 Message: 198

Hi

I am looking for a 240VAC to 9VAC Mains Adapter, 3.4 Amp or higher, Wallwart or Desktop.

I have heard about Stancor STA-5790 and Atari C017945 models for US voltage but don't know of any for 240V.

Does anyone know of a 240V model that is commercially available in the UK?

Thanks

I just wanted to let everybody know that the Atari Computer Enthusiasts of Columbus will be holding their annual swap meet and sale. It will be held on Saturday September the 10th from about 9 am to 3 pm. For more information, you can check out acec.atari.org. I heard somebody say that this is the only Atari swap meet in the country. Don't know if that is true or not, but would like to find out.

Hi folks, I wanted to step in here and give you folk a quick update on the ACEC Vintage Computer and Video Game Swap Meet being held on Saturday 09-13-08 from 9 am to 3 pm in Columbus Ohio. I found out that the westbound lane of Cooke Rd has been closed for construction between Maize Rd. and I-71. I don't know if this effects the eastbound lane or not. There may be some construction delays. I would suggest that anybody going to the swap meet use the E. N. Broadway exit of I-71. Please see our website at acec.atari.org. for more information about the ACEC Vintage Computer and Video Game Swap Meet. Or you can email me at colonel_charles@.... We are still taking reservations for vendor tables. Also remember that it is FREE!!!! FREE!!! FREE!!!!. Hope to see you there!
